Navigating the College Admissions Process

Presented by Joy Scalabrin, Admissions Officer, Johns Hopkins University

Preparing for the college application and admissions process can be a really exciting time for students—a time to explore their interests, think about their future and begin to take ownership of their life plans. It can also be a stressful time not just for them but their entire families. In this session, discover how to prioritize the things that can best impact the process, focusing conversations and energy on the things that matter most. We'll review important steps for preparation, key conversations to have as a family, and the best ways to prepare for the outcomes.

As an Admissions Officer with the Office of Undergraduate Admissions at Johns Hopkins University, Joy Scalabrin is the regional representative for Maryland and DC and is involved in the recruitment and selection of first-year and transfer students to the Krieger School of Arts and Sciences and Whiting School of Engineering. She grew up in Ellicott City and attended Howard County Public Schools before attending Johns Hopkins University, eventually receiving a B.A. in Public Health Studies and Spanish.
